

5 REASONS TO LEAVE YOUR TEACHING JOB

FOR GOOD

Looking for a new challenge

01

You've been teaching forever and feel like you just go through the motions every day. You feel ready to step outside of your comfort zone and dive into something different that lets you explore your skills and interests.

Not feeling fulfilled

You enjoyed the bit where you are actually with your children in class. You find that the day-to-day grind and the demands of the job often overshadow the passion that brought you into teaching in the first place. You want to find a job where you wake up feeling motivated and inspired.

02

You want to be more creative

03

You are starting to find the prescriptive nature of the classroom teaching draining, meaning your need to be creative isn't being met. You are finding yourself yearning for more freedom to express who you are.

Want to spend more time with you family

The long school hours mean you miss out on precious moments with your children. Teaching demands so much of your energy and time. Your hectic school schedule and long hours make it very challenging to be present for family events, school activities, and just the everyday joys of parenting.

04

Lack of flexibility

05

You find the rigid schedule and set curriculum quite rigid, leaving little room for you to bring your personality to the classroom. You long for a more dynamic work environment where you can set your own hours. School can be very overwhelming making the balance between work and home very difficult.

COULD THIS BE YOUR SOLUTION?

If you've downloaded this free guide, it probably means you're thinking about a career change.

I'm Charlotte, the founder of Baby Band. I was a classroom teacher too, once upon a time, so I know exactly what the pressures are like and how difficult it can be to escape the career. I've spent the last few years building up the Baby Band brand and delivering my very own take on pre-school music classes that are unlike any others.

Feeling stuck?

Moving careers is hard, it might feel like it's not the right time or you feel like you don't have any other skills. But, what is really holding you back? Fear? Finances? Lack of business knowledge?

As a Baby Band Franchisee, you would receive a fully formed brand, resources and all the training you will ever need to run a highly successful business.
